

present session was to be a great one, and the hope is that it will be so. But this is what it may turn out to be, for the French have been particularly tight in the negotiations, and I was quite right when he concluded that this is a movement that does great harm to the Government. The principal articles of commerce are being held at long times in the background. But, while the Government may be held responsible for the unnecessary postponement of their own measures, they cannot be fully excused for a king's speech is concerned to the postponement of substantial changes until they are adopted or demanded.

The responsibility for the starting of the various mud-slinging with the Dispatches is with the Government. A patient member of the House is likely to say, as Mr. Forster said last evening that he will continue his motion when it suits his purpose to do so. He may add that he will consider his personal convenience in determining whether he goes on with it or not. But while this way of regarding such matters may command the sympathy of the House, it may be doubted whether it will command it off the floor. If a member of Parliament is responsible to his constituents, he is also responsible to the community generally; and while in my opinion he may have a perfect right to consult his personal convenience, he is not amenable to the public. It may be doubted whether the proportion of the trade of France to England is a larger one relatively. The trade of the United Kingdom with France, it has been pointed out, is but 19 percent of the total foreign trade of the former, while the proportion of the trade of France with the United Kingdom is something like 20 percent. It may be presumed, therefore, that notwithstanding the directions of the blow the new tariff will give to the trade of Great Britain with the Continent, the result of the suspension of commercial relations will be a mere nominal matter to France than to England. No one suggests that the trade between the two countries will cease because a treaty no longer exists. But the French are surely mistaken in imagining that they can close their ports to English manufacturers, and yet keep all the English markets open to their manufactures. They will find by experience that trade is a matter of barter, and that if they supply a check to their trade with England, England will supply one to their trade with them. The first step will probably be to produce at home many of the articles which have been imported from France. This might surely be done in the matter of butter, potatoes, and eggs enormous quantities of which the English people have been in the habit of getting from the Continent. The next step will be to throw into other directions some of the energy that has been bestowed on articles which have been taken by France. This was precisely the step that followed the establishment of the French sugar bounty, and the result was that while a small number of hands were thrown out of work by the loss of the trade that suffered through the bounty, a large number were employed by the fresh trade that the bounties occasioned. But the principal effect of the suspension of the commercial relationships which have existed between England and France for the last twenty years will be that new commercial relationships will be established between England and other countries. Already we find that negotiations are being entered into for the formation of treaties with Italy, Spain, and Portugal. The stronger wines of these countries have hitherto been, to a large extent, shut out in the interest of the lighter wines of France. If the French decide that they will not take English woollens, England is not likely to adhere to a duty in favour of French wines. A commercial rupture between England and France must of necessity affect the wine trade of the Continent, and that can hardly fail to have its influence on the wine trade of Australia.

Both the Home and the Foreign Relations between England and France seem for the moment to be considerably strained. The Colonization Treaty expires during the present year, and failing negotiations for the formation of a new treaty, English trade with the Republic will be regulated by the General Tariff. A concession of three months has been granted for the benefit of the countries which may be desirous of entering into a free trade union with France, and the French authorities have intimated that those who desire to avail themselves of the present opportunity had better lose no time. The English Government have pressed for an extension of the time for making negotiations; but to this, as we now find, the French have finally declined to consent, although they express a hope that an understanding will be arrived at in spite of appearances to the contrary. The present convention lasts till the 31st November next. If no arrangement is agreed upon by that time, the compact by which the commercial relations of the two countries have been regulated hitherto will cease to exist.

At present the prospect of the formation of a new treaty seems to be small indeed. France has recently promulgated a new Customs tariff, and one that is decidedly protective in its tendency. The first feature in the new scheme is the substitution of specific for ad valorem duties. The effect of this will be the virtual destruction of the trade in the class of goods which the English call shoddy, but which the French curiously enough call remanse. It is not, however, to the principle of specific duties that the English people object. The change from ad valorem to specific duties would have been a relief to the British manufacturer if the change had not been made an opportunity for raising the duties to a prohibitive scale. This is what has practically been done. The French, in common with many other nations, have imbibed the notion that the ideal tariff is the one that will give the home producer the opportunity supplying all that is necessary for home consumption. They are, of course, anxious that France should continue to supply England with what the latter has been accustomed to take, but are not willing that the compliment should be returned. The French imagine that a one-sided trade between the two countries may be made possible by a prohibitive tariff. They are encouraged in this notion by the belief that do what they may, England will not renounce free trade. Whatever may be the future of the French trade with England, it is clear that the new tariff is enforced, and there is every probability that it will be, there can be little doubt that England's trade with France will decline.

On some of the chief articles of English export the new duties are practically prohibitory. According to a return issued by the Board of Trade, the duty on linen yarns has been increased from 50 to 100 percent, on woolen yarns the increase is 50 percent, on unbleached linens it is from 24 to 40 percent, and on cotton tissues in regard to the lighter fabrics, 100 percent. The duty on soap has been doubled, that on starch quadrupled, and on iron and steel the new duties are said to be prohibitory. The French authorities appear to have gone out of their way to multiply the obstructions to English trade. In articles in which the French producer can undersell the English producer in his own market large increases have been placed. In the Nottingham market French yarns are sold in competition with the English yarns, and yet on the latter there is a large increase of duty. In the plate-glass trade, also, the French manufacturer can undersell his English rival in the home market of the latter, and yet here also there is to be a large increase on the English export.

The value of the total trade of the United Kingdom with France last year was seventy millions sterling; that of France with England for the ten years ending with 1879, was between six and seven hundred million francs. It will thus be seen that the English trade with France is a much larger one than with a single state with England, a fact which gives a due and compelling basis for the description which the French authorities are determined to impose. The principal articles which the French send to France have been already named; the chief articles of French export to England consist of sugar, wine, silk, and woolen. It is stated that the imports from France into England consist of the exports of 10 percent of articles of use, about 40 percent of articles of clothing, and the remainder between 18 and 21 percent of articles. The average value of the articles of commerce stands best in value, but it is the article of the last two years which is the most valuable. Among the articles of clothing the stand nearly half the total import last year, including over one hundred millions sterling on a total of articles of less than 21 millions sterling. The only article of any great magnitude is woolen manufacture, amounting to little less than five millions sterling.

It is worthy of remark that although the export trade of France to England is a smaller one in itself than that of England to France, it is a larger one relatively. The trade of the United Kingdom with France, it has been pointed out, is but 19 percent of the total foreign trade of the former, while the proportion of the trade of France with the United Kingdom is something like 20 percent. It may be presumed, therefore, that notwithstanding the directions of the blow the new tariff will give to the trade of Great Britain with the Continent, the result of the suspension of commercial relations will be a mere nominal matter to France than to England. No one suggests that the trade between the two countries will cease because a treaty no longer exists. But the French are surely mistaken in imagining that they can close their ports to English manufacturers, and yet keep all the English markets open to their manufactures. They will find by experience that trade is a matter of barter, and that if they supply a check to their trade with England, England will supply one to their trade with them. The first step will probably be to produce at home many of the articles which have been imported from France. This might surely be done in the matter of butter, potatoes, and eggs enormous quantities of which the English people have been in the habit of getting from the Continent. The next step will be to throw into other directions some of the energy that has been bestowed on articles which have been taken by France. This was precisely the step that followed the establishment of the French sugar bounty, and the result was that while a small number of hands were thrown out of work by the loss of the trade that suffered through the bounty, a large number were employed by the fresh trade that the bounties occasioned. But the principal effect of the suspension of the commercial relationships which have existed between England and France for the last twenty years will be that new commercial relationships will be established between England and other countries. Already we find that negotiations are being entered into for the formation of treaties with Italy, Spain, and Portugal. The stronger wines of these countries have hitherto been, to a large extent, shut out in the interest of the lighter wines of France. If the French decide that they will not take English woollens, England is not likely to adhere to a duty in favour of French wines. A commercial rupture between England and France must of necessity affect the wine trade of the Continent, and that can hardly fail to have its influence on the wine trade of Australia.

The object of the meeting held at the Masonic Hall, last night, is one that will command itself to everyone who can sympathize with the persecuted and oppressed. The sufferings inflicted upon the Jews of Southern Russia by the ignorant and misguided peasantry of that country have called forth the indignant comments of the leading Press in every civilized land. Nineteen years ago the same Liberal English Minister who now presides at the Foreign Office had to throw the shield of British protection over the persecuted Jews of Rumania, and now no sooner is he installed in Downing-street again than his aid is invoked against a greater danger from a stronger foe. The depreciation which waited upon him at the outbreak of the riots had two aspects of the case to present—one being out of the treatment of a Jew who was a naturalized British subject, and the other affecting the Jewish population of St. Petersburg. In regard to the first, Lord Granville had referred the case to the legal advisers of the Crown, and while acknowledging that according to Russian law no man possessed with "Russia might exempt" Jews who were naturalized British subjects. In regard to the second, he decided to write indignant despatches "merely meant for home consumption," and did not think that would help the cause of the sufferers. Unofficial representations might be of use, and he would neglect no chance of interposing in that way where he thought it might be effective. From inquiries received by the British Legation and the consuls, it appears there is only too much ground for crediting the reports of persecution, in spite of some exaggeration. Hundreds of families are said to be homeless, hundreds more are taking refuge in flight, and it is alleged that property has been destroyed to the value of a hundred millions of roubles, or over fourteen millions sterling. This estimate of loss is enormous, and is equal to a tax of six pounds per head of the whole Jewish population of Russia. If their loss approaches anything like this sum, they will need substantial proofs of sympathy from all their friends far and near. The Czar himself was waited upon by a deputation in St. Petersburg the day before Lord Granville was interviewed in London, and he threw the blame of the persecution upon nihilist agitators, who wished to upset society in every way they could. He promised protection, but the Jewish Chronicle and the still more indignant Jewish World assert that his court officials are bribed to offer only a feeble resistance to the rioters. What these papers demand is full religious equality for Jews in Russia, and the abolition of all civil and political disabilities to which they are now subjected. The anti-Semitic agitation is not confined to Russia. In Germany it is almost as bitter, with Bismarck in secret, if not open alliance; it has shown itself under a different phase in the United States; in Roumania it is reviving; in Egypt it is active; and in Hungary it is still in smothered discontent. The very success of the Hebrew race in finance, commerce, literature, and art has made them enemies. Scattered throughout the world, they have put business in the place of country, while preserving their identity and their national customs and religion. But success is no crime, and where they pay taxes and obey the laws they have a right to all the privileges of citizenship. To be jealous of them is to pay them a high compliment, and lead weight to Beaconsfield's extravagant boasts of the supremacy of the Semitic race. The French, however, even when good advice is recommending them to be less exclusive, and to identify themselves more with the people among whom they dwell. They have done this principally in Australia, and the meeting of last night was an appropriate expression alike of the esteem of their fellow citizens and of Australian sympathy for the suffering and oppressed of every land.

A return has just been laid before Parliament giving the number of times the clergyman of the various denominations attended the City and the Poor Clerical Schools for the purpose of giving religious instruction during 1879, and 1880. From that return it appears that on January 1st, 1880, there were 1,161 boys in single classes of 100 or more, and during the two years mentioned 2,100 boys of the other schools were only visited twice or thrice in the course of a week. At those days when the schools, the names are given of 120 Church of England, 120 Free Church, 120 Roman Catholic, 120 Unitarian, 120 Methodist, 5 Lutherans, and 120 Congregational. The non-conformist bodies generally speaking have put the education system of the colony without protest, but some of the other denominations have not done so, and it is very striking comment upon their protestations against the alleged social character of that system that they have so seldom taken advantage of the facilities which the State authorities offer in the schools. The clergyman of 120 Church of England schools, 120 were not visited at all in two years, and 10 received only one visit each in a year. Out of 76 Roman Catholic schools, there were 18 at which no clergyman attended; whilst none of the 4 Wesleyan, 1 Hebrew, and 3 Presbyterian schools received a visit from a clergyman in 1879 and 1880. It is evident that since the existing Education Act came into force the clergy have accepted the situation, and are beginning to recognize the fact that the curriculum of the State schools is not really held to be so glibes in its character as has been the fashion to allege.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Post of the Transvaal are still in a rebellious mood. We were told yesterday, in our special cable message, that the majority of the candidates for the new Parliament are bitterly opposed to the convention that was signed by the trade between the two countries. Others besides Mr. Bourne may think that a royal commission consisting of three or four members would have been more satisfactory than such a Commission as the one that has been appointed. That, however, is a matter of opinion. It is not very long since an important inquiry into charges affecting a District Court Judge was conducted by a Royal Commission consisting of one gentleman, and so far as the public are aware, the result of that inquiry was in every way satisfactory. The really important question is not how the inquiry is conducted, but what it will bring forth. This is the phase of the question that will have to be debated when Mr. Somers has done his work, and it is difficult to see what good can come from a discussion of any other phase of it just now. The time of which notice is given is not likely to end in the defeat of the Government, nor is it probable that it will add anything to the elucidation of the Milburn Park mystery.

of 32,000 sheep to Sydney during the month of September, which will mean the running of at least one sheep-train every day during the month.

No fresh case of small-pox was reported yesterday. The quarantine disinfecting staff were employed on Monday and yesterday in disinfecting the neighbourhood of the houses in which small-pox has recently been found—including that in which the child Cland Thomson resided, No. 26 Irving-street. The last mentioned case was reported on Monday evening. The following is a copy of the bulletin forwarded from the quarantine station yesterday morning to the Treasury—“All the patients both on board the Paraway and in the enclosure are doing well.”

A young officer who signs himself “X” has written a letter drawing attention in what follows to an open drain between the Newgate and the Newtown Railway station. The master, he thinks, demands the attention of the municipal authorities. The drain and several open sewers in the borough exude noxious vapours day and night, and he says the residents would improve the quality of money to improve their condition, because it would preserve their health and increase the value of their property. A correspondent writing in Clemons Head writes concerning the “dams and slums of Paddington,” “I write to you, Sir, in the name of the public, to call your attention to the state of things in Paddington, and I beg you to do all you can to get the Corporation to make all the arrangements necessary for the removal of the slums.” The writer says that the “slums” consist of numerous narrow streets, in which mere tenements are packed together in a disgraceful manner. They are, however, well built and gutted, and have well-formed roadside drains, they are swept and cleaned, and the dust and house-rubbish are removed once a week. Except on two or three close sunny days in the summer, he has not seen or seen anything offensive in them. On one occasion two aldermen endeavoured to have the streets cleaned twice a week, but their efforts were frustrated by their brother aldermen. The writer thinks “T. J.” has been too hasty, and that if a little time is allotted to the Master of the Borough, that functionality will cause the removal of the nuisance in the area which has been complained of. “Citizen” writes, complaining that while the authorities are improving the condition of some principal thoroughfares they are neglecting that of minor ones. The street from Dixon-street East to Mort's wool store, Darling Harbour, he thinks requires all the attention the authorities could devote towards placing it in a condition capable of sustaining the traffic which passes over it. Heaps of rubbish have been deposited there, around which water runs in copious streams. The street is little more than 100 yards from George-street, and not far from a house in which small-pox has broken out, and the disease, “Citizen” thinks, might be attributable to the aggregations of rubbish which has probably, by this time, replaced the contaminated water with that which is free from objection. Apart from the obnoxious state, the water is pronounced by Dr. Dansey to be free from deleterious effects, and even beneficial to health. A rumour was current during yesterday that the city authorities were trying experiments with the water by introducing ditches into it, with a view of shafting the sewage of small-pox. Of course it is unnecessary to give a serious denial to such a statement. The flavour in question was perfectly discernible in the tunnel water admitted to the shafting of the tunnel, and before it entered the pipe.

We have received from the Government Printer the report of the New South Wales Association for the year ended December 31, 1880.

A public meeting was held last night in the Masonic Hall, the object being to devise means for alleviating the distress of the Jews in South Africa. Sir John Robertson occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by the Rev. A. R. Davis, the Rev. Dr. Ellis, Mr. W. B. Dailey, Mr. T. Buckland, Mr. J. E. Salmon, the Rev. Dr. Steel, Mr. D. O'Connor, M.L.A., Mr. S. A. Joseph, and Mr. G. H. Reid. The meeting was unusually well attended considering the inclemency of the weather, and almost all religious sects seemed to be represented. Resolutions were passed expressing sympathy with the oppressed Jews, affirming the desirability of relieving their necessities, and appointing a committee to raise subscriptions for the latter purpose. A large number of those at the meeting subscribed, and it is announced that the money then received added to various sums sent him previously, amounted to nearly £1,000. A full report of the meeting is given in another column.

The Marine Board meeting, adjourned on Monday afternoon, was resumed at 10 a.m. yesterday, there being present—Captain Hixson (president), Captain Broomefield, McLean, and Robertson, and Commander Lindeman (secretary). The examination of witnesses in the cases of the Illawarra and Civility was continued. Thomas McLean, chief officer of the Illawarra; Thomas Bartlett, master of the Civility; Dr. Coid, of Kiama; and Sergeant Healev, of Kiama, were examined as to the collision. Captain Rounsevel was examined as to the amount of damage done to the Civility. David Smith, the chief officer of that vessel, and John Wilson, a seaman, who steer'd her out of Kiama, corroborated the evidence given as to the collision; and Douglass Atkins, another sailor, and George Henderson, engineer of the Civility, spoke to similar effect. Mr. J. H. Want and Mr. Dalrymple addressed the Board; and, the case being closed, the president, shortly after 1 o'clock, adjourned the Board until 10.30 a.m. to-day, when its decision will be announced.

A large audience attended Dr. Simms' lecture on checks, skin, neck, shoulders, and forehead, at the Temperance Hall, Pitt-street, last evening. He remarked that rosy, plump cheeks are the sum and cheer-giver of social society, and denote a frame amply supplied with life. Thin cheeks imply a loss of all that is beautiful in nature or art. Pale, thin cheeks accompany low vitality. Long necks can endure more fatigue than short ones; short ones are full of sagacity. He gave an amusing description of “Adam's apple” in the neck, and why it was caused. A neck with wrinkles running round it signifies a tendency to long life, a fondness for general improvement. A pyramidal form of neck, tapering upwards, prognosticates a tendency to rule, as in William the Conqueror. A good constitution and great determination belong to it. Popularity even attaches itself to a neck largest at the head. A neck inclining forwards from the shoulders presages attention. A large neck tells of a strong constitution; a small neck the reverse. The memory was examined as to the amount of damage done to the Civility. David Smith, the chief officer of that vessel, and John Wilson, a seaman, who steer'd her out of Kiama, corroborated the evidence given as to the collision; and Douglass Atkins, another sailor, and George Henderson, engineer of the Civility, spoke to similar effect. The lecture conveys much valuable information that is of practical use in daily life. The themes for to-night are hair, beard, feet, hands, and handwriting.

The usual fortnightly meeting of the Waratah Branch of the Order of the Eastern Star was held on Monday evening. Mr. D. A. Thomas, superintendent, in the chair. The attendance of children and officials was, as usual, large, and a large amount of interest was exercised in the proceedings of the evening. During the intervening period from one meeting to another, the children are prepared with songs, duets, dialogues, and recitations, and from the manifest improvement in their singing and reciting, the superintendent and officials have every reason to think that their efforts are being productive of much good. The Waratah Order invariably impresses upon his charge the main object of their meeting together from time to time, viz., the evils arising from the use of intoxicating beverages, and the advantages to be derived from adherence to the pledge of total abstinence. Of course the little ones entertain a feeling of pride that they have been able to commit to memory carefully selected recitations, as well as to master the tunes to oft-repeated songs, and naturally they like to be seen upon the platform. Encouragement in this respect is a contributing agency to a well-sustained interest, and by a judicious arrangement of the programme a pleasant and happy meeting is invariably kept.

The following is the order of church service at St. Andrew's Cathedral on the evening of St. Bartholomew's Day:—“Nunc Dimittis.” Arnold in A.; “Amen,” I will not hand to the Boers (tenor solo and chorus).

The Boer Guard, the different companies of 1800 p.m. (weather permitting), under the conductorship of Bandmaster Penhall, programme—March, “True to Every Man”; R. Smith; value, “Belgrave”; Godfrey; selection, “L'Africaine”; Meyerbeer; quadrille, “Madame Favart”; value, “Dragon Guards”; “Mme. Favart”; “Olivette”; Austrian; galop, “Piz,” P. Glaz; God Save the Queen.

and the financial results highly satisfactory. At about 10 o'clock the meeting was closed by the bidding singing a martial little piece, “Hark! for the Lord,” after which the benediction was pronounced.

Sir, would you kindly allow me to ask the medical men who sit at the public meetings to make interested in small-pox a special subject? I have a few remarks to make on the subject.

Notwithstanding the large amount of correspondence which has almost daily appeared in the columns of this paper, not one member of the “legally qualified” profession has deemed it necessary to explain this important fact.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

ADELAIDE, TUESDAY.

In the Assembly to-day the debate on the Budget speech was opened by Mr. Rousewell, the late Treasurer, who severely criticised the financial statement. He charged the Treasurer with under-estimating the expenditure, and over-estimating the revenue, besides bolstering it up by misappropriating the loan premiums and putting them to the revenue. He contended that the remainder of the duty on tea would lead to a termination of the Convention with New South Wales, and threw the trade into the hands of the Victorian merchants, who would take tea out of board and end it up the river via Victor Harbour, to the exclusion of our traders. The Telephone Bill was passed through committee. Mr. Morgan has given notice of an amendment in the Constitution Bill that in the event of the Legislative Council rejecting a bill passed by the Assembly in two consecutive sessions within six months, and on the second occasion by an absolute majority, it shall be lawful for, but not obligatory upon, the Governor at the next dissolution of the Assembly to dissolve the Legislative Council.

The members of the Railway Routes Committee returned from the North to-day, having visited a large number of inland towns, and collected a quantity of evidence respecting the proposed railway lines and extension.

At the Government land sale to-day close on 500 acres were sold, at an average of a little over 30s per acre.

The Government intend establishing manufacturing districts by proclamation by the Governor, on sufficient reason being shown, and the public consent given.

Wood is coming in freely from stations in the far North, with the first of the wool clip, which is reported fair.

Mr. T. W. Cloud, the well-known mineralogist, reports very unfavourably of the collection of minerals at the Institute Museum, and recommends the appointment of a mineralogist, and the adoption of a plan similar to that of Melbourne, of establishing a small laboratory in connection with the Museum.

MINING INTELLIGENCE.

GOVERNMENT OF THE NORTH CO. NO LIABILITY, BLACK HILL, BALIARAT.—The mining manager reports that the eastern drive has been driven 15 feet from the chamber. No change in the ground, except a little more water coming from face of drive. Western drive has been driven some distance. Gold very jointy, and well mixed with mica.

A Mine was worked.

UNION JACK M. CO., NO LIABILITY, PRINCETON, VICTORIA.—The mining manager reports that the intermediate shaft is down 52 feet, and will be sunk from that point by contractors, who commence to-day. Dam ringing.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.—A London paper says that the House of Commons was occupied on Wednesday, June 22, with discussing a bill introduced by Mr. Pease, for the abolition of capital punishment. It was rejected by 175 to 78, and the arguments were urged by Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. George Mathews, of the "Society to the New South Wales Football Association." Mr. Head, the secretary of the association, responded, and promised the Northumberland Club entertained a visiting team at Hodson's Hotel. Mr. Callaghan, in the absence of the Rev. Canon Tyrrell, occupied the chair, and in proposing the toast of "The Visiting Team," made a very happy speech. Stock and Stations.

MITCHELL DISTRICT, QUEENSLAND.

FOR PRIVATE SALE.
THE RIVERMAYE STATION, situated on the Thompson River, about 140 miles west of Townsville, and adjoining their noted pastoral properties Coralia, Tocal, Westland, and Katzen.

Emeral contains an area of about 100,000 acres.

ABOUT 100,000 ACRES of the most pastoral land which there is, being secured with Mitchell, blue, and black grasses, and all the choice varieties of cotton bush, blue bush, and herbage indigenous to this noted belt of country, and on which both sheep and cattle thrive and flourish ex tremely.

THE STATION is about 100 miles and permanently watered by about 22 miles frontage to the main channels of the never-falling Thompson River, and by the Emu and Moomba Creeks and their tributaries.

The cool air on the river and creek frontage afford sufficient shelter for building and rearing purposes, and on the crests of the ridges there are plenty of shade trees.

The whole of the run is free from scrub, has a good supply of Mitchell, blue, and black grass seed in it, and is of the best wool-growing character.

The HOMESTEAD, which is located on Limestone Creek, near the centre of the property, is a comfortable two-story stone house.

COMFORTABLE SIX-ROOMED COTTAGE, built of stone timber, with detached kitchen, stables, and outbuildings, also a large woolshed, and a fine stable.

A COUPLE of new well-made wire sheep and cattle fencing machines, and a quantity of wire fencing, and the erection of another 50 miles of fencing would amply provide for 100,000 sheep.

The stock now less than half stocked with very carefully bred sheep and cattle, etc.

11,000 CHOICE DURHAM CATTLE.

A mixed herd of cattle.

ABOUT 13,000 FULL FLEECED SHEEP, of which some 16,000 are lambing ewes, including 13,000 now dropping lamb, and 1000 lambs to Gloucester rams, the ewes having been mated with the best rams.

A few miles of new wire sheep and cattle fencing machines, and the erection of another 50 miles of fencing would amply provide for 100,000 sheep.

The stock now less than half stocked with very carefully bred sheep and cattle, etc.

THE HAT STOCK

have for many years been well known in both the Adelaide and Rockhampton markets.

Gould and wool are now conveyed to and from Withfield railway station, and are sent by road, and will also be sent by road, to Rockhampton.

At, however, the further extension of the Queensland railways to Rockhampton, and the opening up of the port northward from Burleighdale, there is no fear of the loss of mineral, which have

being cancelled, or of its being necessary to purchase any land on the station.
